

Attention Principals and Executive Staff!

“After all, progress is the point isn’t it?”
Leading the learning towards progress... a day with James Nottingham.

Two questions that ought to drive education:
How much progress are your students making and how do you know?

We have many ways to report on student achievement whereas progress, more often than not, is talked about purely in anecdotal terms.

In this seminar James will explore ways we can redress the balance so that students come to school to improve rather than just prove. He will show you how to refer to specific goals, ensure feedback is credible, teach students and staff how to self-assess and focus on progress rather than ability.

Teachers will leave with a better idea of the impact they are having on the intellectual growth of their students.

After all, progress is the point isn't it?

James Nottingham is a leader in transforming up-to-date research into best practice for teaching and learning. Initially a teacher and leader in schools for 3-18 year olds, James now has his own company “Challenging Learning” with a team of 20 consultants across Scandinavia, the UK and Australia. He is listed amongst the Future 500, a definitive list of the UK’s most forward thinking and brightest innovators. James has been a keynote speaker at many international conferences including the 2013 Australian Visible Learning Conference in Brisbane, and the 2014 IPSHA Conference in Sydney.
